

THE CAVE MAKES A HIT

One of the most popular points of interest in the new YMCA building is the "Mobil Cave" located under the main building. This rendering by Donley, Bundy and Associates, architects for the new activity center, depicts what the builder and YMCA executives had in mind when they included the cave in the plans for the new facilities. A huge fireplace, believed to be one of the two largest in the Southwest, dominates the cave, filling a complete wall.

Cave Certain to Be a Hit With the Young YMCA Set

One of the most popular points of interest in the new Torrance Family YMCA building at 2900 W. Sepulveda Blvd. is the "Mobil Cave."

Located under the main building, this novel room has the atmosphere of a genuine cave. Stalagmites and stalactites hang from the ceiling and jut up from the floor.

A huge fireplace, believed to be one of the two largest in the entire Southwest Los Angeles County area, fills a complete wall.

This unique room will doubtlessly get extra heavy use by groups such as the Y-Indian Guides. Joe Wilcox, executive secretary of the Torrance Family YMCA, reports that "reservations" for use of the new cave already are very numerous.

The cave and adjoining rooms which contain the equipment and machinery to operate the entire building, represents a huge expense that has been met primarily through generous donations by Torrance's Mobil Oil Co. refinery.
